Sir John Dering. D ix,358p $2 '23 Little [7s 6d Low] 23-15820
Another romantic novel by the author of The broad highway that will delight the ardent admirers of Mr Farnol. Sir John Dering, the hero, "youthful and superlative elegant from curled peruke to buckled shoes, a young exquisite," is skilled as a duelist; indeed in the prologue he has just killed Charles Tremayne, who had drawn first, thereby bringing down on his head the curses of Lady Herminia Barrasdaile, "a tall handsome creature, black-eyed, full-lipped, dominant in her beauty." Upbraided by his friend General Sir Hector McLean for his mode of life "prone to all manner of follies," Sir John is told he has an unrelenting enemy in Lady Herminia. There is a wealth of character drawing in this book. Those who enjoyed The broad highway and Peregrine's progress will revel in his new romance.—Adv.

History of Christianity, comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in the History of the decline and fall of the Roman empire; a preface, life of the author, including various notes by Guizot, Wenck, Wilman and other scholars. 3d ed S 778,86p il $2.50 '24 Eckler
One reason for this volume is that a revised and abridged edition of Gibbon's History of the decline and fall of the Roman empire, which is deficient in a most important feature, has gained wide circulation in schools and colleges. The editor naively remarks that by omitting certain portions relating to the history of the church in which Gibbon too frequently displays the "hostility he felt to the Christian religion" that he has gained space for narrating at length events that have influenced the history of the world.
These omissions are fully supplied by the present work, without alterations or interpolations, precisely as Gibbon in his great work first published it to the world. The matter selected being that portion that relates to the history of the Christian religion. It shows when, where and how Christianity originated, who were its founders and what were the sentiments, character, manners, numbers and condition of the primitive Christians.—Adv.

This book throws a new light upon Napoleon. He is shown here not as the great hero he is commonly supposed to be, but as a man who had a wonderful ability for advertising himself. It is a logical and ironic attack upon what the author calls the Napoleonic legend. He admits the existence of many qualities that make for greatness, but he is far from being a worshipper. He goes back to the beginning of Napoleon's career and ruthlessly strips off the laurels of his glory.—Adv.

Mental chemistry. O 331p $3.60 '22 The author, 709 Pine st., St Louis, Mo. 23-96

When two or more molecules are grouped, a new individuality is created, and this individuality possesses characteristics which are not possessed by either of the elements which gave it being. What is true in the inorganic world is equally true in the organic. Certain conscious thought processes will invariably be followed by the same consequences. As the possible combinations of thought are infinite, the results are seen in an infinite variety of circumstances, conditions and experiences.

"The book will make everyone think, and it will not only develop the mind, from a mere thought standpoint, but enable one to broaden his viewpoint. After all, if you can secure a 'practical vision' from one who is an authority, you will have gained additional knowledge that is priceless." F. P. Millard, D.O.—Adv.

There is no better evidence of the increased specialization in modern business organization than the growth of risk-bearing as a separate function. Mr Hardy has realized the need of a separate study and investigation in this wide field. A statement of the general problems of risk and risk-bearing is followed by the appraisement in turn of each kind of machinery that functions today for this purpose.—Adv.

D xxiii,382p $1.50 '22 Allerton bk. (corr pub) A23-2053

Daniel W. Harmon spent nineteen years of his life in the service of the North West Fur company, of which he was a partner and superintendent of its affairs beyond the Rocky mountains, eight years of which were passed beyond the Rockies, and between them and the Pacific ocean. His Journal was written from day to day among the wild people and the scenes he described, and the narrative is entitled to implicit credit for veracity. When he first came among them the Indians still wandered through the country in their primitive simplicity, and much of his life was passed among them. He even took a wife, ad interim, from one of the tribes and lived with her until he forsook the country forever. He was therefore in a good position to study the Indians, and a considerable portion of this work is devoted to his account of the Indians of the Rocky Mountain region. The narrative of explorations in the immense wilderness of the Northwest, and of long sledge and canoe journeys into pathless solitudes forms one of the leading contributions to the literature of the region.—Adv.

Robert Henri is unquestionably one of the most powerful influences in American art today. He is the man about whom students feel more curiosity and interest regarding his work, personality and ideas than any other. He is probably America's foremost figure painter. This book will therefore meet the demand not only among art students but art lovers and connoisseurs for a knowledge of what Robert Henri stands for in art today. It contains his whole system of art. It is thoroughly practical.—Adv.

Forgotten fires. O 208p il $2 '23 Lewiston journal co., Lewiston, Mo. 24-4301
Forgotten fires is the story of eighteen months in France and Germany during the Great war and the story of the summer of 1919 with home service in meeting over sixty transports which brought the boys home again. It is charmingly written. The author has filled the pages with the service and sacrifice of those about her in such a vivid colorful manner that it is impossible for one to read without a better understanding of those men who came back with a different outlook on life. Dedicated to everybody who shared in the great crusade, it is a notable contribution to the story of the splendid service rendered our men in khaki. It is a book one cares to read the second and third time.—Adv.

Story of man's mind. O ix,302p il $3 '23 Small 23-9214

A general account in broad outlines of the whole field of psychology for all classes of readers is a terse description of The story of man's mind. There are chapters for the child under such headings as Does the jellyfish think?; for the mother who wishes to understand the psychology of her children as in Learning school lessons; for the business man in The psychology underlying advertising and Likes and dislikes in business. Then there are chapters on getting married, falling in love, the psychology for the home and family, against the sowing of wild oats (a new point of appeal to people who are for science but against Freudian promiscuity). Telepathy, auto-suggestion—the Coué method, psychoanalysis, dual personality and mental tests are discussed. The treatment of auto-suggestion contains especially valuable material on the value of prayer. Four chapters are devoted to a method of relieving nervous conditions such as insomnia. A book in broad outlines in the application of a science of the mind to the entire business and family life.—Adv.

Decorative furniture; a picture book of the beautiful forms of all ages and all periods. F xxiii,480p il $25 (105s) Lippincott [23-17800]
A thorough treatment by an authority of the decorative furniture of all periods from early Egypt and Assyria to the present day. Includes high-class walnut, mahogany and satinwood furniture as well as lacquered, painted and gilded. Mr Hunter's text supplies a descriptive background for each chapter and develops the historical sequence of furniture and design, accentuating relations never before made clear. The handsomest, most comprehensive book on furniture ever published and the only one to present adequately the furniture of early Egypt. Thirty plates in color and 450 pages illustrating, in black and white, more than 900 pieces of the world's most famous furniture.—Adv.

General psychology, rev ed D xv,368p il $2 '23 Univ. of Chicago press [10s Cambridge univ. press] 23-12145
In view of the rapid strides that psychology has been making in recent years, Mr Hunter has felt the imperative need of a thorough revision of General psychology. In the light of new discoveries and conclusions, certain of the chapters have been rewritten, and new material has been added. The book is a survey of psychological subject-matter conducted under the constant belief that the facts of consciousness and those of behaviour are most closely related. With its new material this standard work meets every demand of a brief course in psychology.—Adv.

The disclosures of this volume are based on an investigation of the negro situation in Chicago, but the discussions of racial questions which it contains are applicable to all sections where a similar problem exists. The striking illustrations and reports that gave the original volume so much point are retained in full, as well as all of the fifty-nine recommendations for a wiser disposition of racial matters.
"Their report itself will be a magnificent instrument of enlightenment—and not least among citizens who have thought they knew all about it but who have too gullibly accepted the current rumors and made the current deductions from them on negro character and potentialities."—Bruno Lasker, in the Survey Graphic.—Adv.
